A Put Up Job

By SADIE OLCOTT

Copyright, 1919, by American Press Association.

"I understand, Wilkins," said Jones, "that Thompson is engaged to Miss Watriss."

"Funny, isn't it? The idea of a man lawyer marrying a woman lawyer."

"So it is. How would they behave on opposite sides of the same case?"

"I'd like to try them. By the bye, Thompson has my case against your company. Suppose you put your case in the hands of Miss Watriss?"

"I'll do it."

When Mr. Thompson came into court and saw his fiancée lined against him he felt his brows. But she gave him a sweet smile, as much as to say, "Isn't it nice for you and me to try a case on opposite sides?"

Thompson recovered himself, returned the smile and declared that it would be delightful. As the attorney for the plaintiff he opened the case.

Now, Mr. Thompson was an able attorney. In the first place, he entered heart and soul into every case he conducted and had the reputation among his professional associates of getting more out of his witnesses to injure the opposite side and more out of their witnesses to help his own side than any man at the bar. In the present case he coaxed his witnesses, helping them by leading questions so that they were a tower of strength for his case. Miss Watriss, seeing the advantage he was gaining, became restive. She began to object to nearly every question. But the judge did not sustain her objections, and this irritated her. The consequence was that when her own witnesses took the stand she was in a very bad humor.

By this time the attorney for the plaintiff had become absorbed in his case to the exclusion of every other consideration. The first witness called for the defense was a mild gentleman, who was never sure about anything.

"Do you remember," sneered the attorney, "what you ate for breakfast this morning?"

"I object," shouted Miss Watriss, springing to her feet.

The objection was sustained.

Mr. Thompson then showed the witness a paper and asked him if he wrote it.

"It looks like my handwriting," was the reply, "and that seems to be my signature, but I couldn't swear to it."

"How old are you?"

"Sixty."

"Do you consider yourself in your second childhood?"

"I object," again shouted Miss Watriss, this time with red-hot cheeks.

"Your honor," said Mr. Thompson, with exasperated coolness, "perhaps the attorney for the defendant would like to conduct my case for me. I would prefer to have her do so rather than prevent my proving that her witness is either incompetent from loss of memory or is withholding evidence."

Mr. Thompson by this time had forgotten that he had a fiancée and that fiancée was his opposing counsel. Perhaps force of habit got the better of him. Miss Watriss gave him an angry glance, but made no reply. Mr. Thompson either did not notice her wrath or was used to exciting the wrath of his opponents. Indeed, this was a favorite method with him.

Having browbeaten a dozen witnesses for the defense until they were not sure of anything except what he wished them to be sure of, Mr. Thompson summed up the case as one of the most ardent witnesses against his client that had ever been perpetrated upon a long suffering person. Miss Watriss, who knew that his client was a rascal who was trying to ruin her own client, could scarcely contain herself through anger. Mr. Thompson's artful method of distorting facts, his smooth but cutting irony, were like rubbing a file on a rheumatic member. Miss Watriss' condition was not improved, either, by the loss of her case and costs for her much injured defendant. When they left the courtroom Mr. Thompson, who had suddenly dropped the attorney and returned to the condition of lover, joined his fiancée and said:

"Sweetheart, I congratulate you on having done so splendidly."

"Don't sweeten me!"

"Why, my dear, you don't mean to say that you have been affected by your feelings toward me by this lawsuit?"

"I have been so far affected that I wish you to consider our engagement at an end!"

"Great heavens! What is the meaning of this? We lawyers—that is, men lawyers, no matter how we have wrangled over a case—always leave the courtroom friends."

"I will have nothing further to do with a man who would treat a poor old gentleman as you did my principal witness, and, as for your references to me, they were lukewarm insults!"

Shortly after that Miss Watriss received a call from the two men who had "put up the job" on her and her lover.

"Mr. Thompson," said Jones, "has my law business. I am willing to transfer it to you, and Mr. Wilkins will give you all his on one condition."

"Name it," said the lady.

"That you become reconciled to your former fiancée and renew your engagement."

They were months in persuading Miss Watriss to accept the condition. When she was married they gave her a fine check for a bridal gift, and when her first child was born her husband succeeded to her law business.

TWO WORDS DEFINED.

Difference Between a Sanitarium and a Sanatorium.

The words "sanitarium" and "sanatorium" are popularly understood to have the same meaning and are generally used interchangeably when designating or describing places of refuge for sick people, but there is, in fact, quite a distinction between the meaning of the two words. In answer to a correspondent on this subject the Literary Digest says:

"The distinction between these words lies in the fact that they are derived from two different Latin roots. 'Sanatorium' is derived from the late Latin sanatorium, meaning health giving. The term relates specially to an institution for treatment of disease or care of invalids, especially an establishment employing natural therapeutic agents or conditions peculiar to the locality or some specific treatment or treating particular diseases." On the other hand, 'sanitarium' is derived from the Latin sanitas, from sanus, meaning whole or sound. 'Sanitarium' relates more specifically to a place where the hygienic conditions are preservative of health as distinguished from one where therapeutic agencies are employed." Hence it is the province of a 'sanitarium' to preserve health, that of a 'sanatorium' to restore it. Care should be exercised in combining the proper vowels in these two words in order to indicate correctly the derivation."

Teaching the Cutpurses.

Stow in his account of London between 1590 and 1600 depicts an inn kept by a kind of vagabond of the time of Queen Elizabeth: "One Wotton kept an alehouse . . . near Billingsgate, and in the same house he procured all the cutpurses about the city to repair. There was a school set up to learn young boys to cut purses. Two devices were hung up. The one was a pocket, the other was a purse. The pocket had in it certain counters and was hung about with hawk's bells, and over the top did hang a little scarving bell. The purse had silver in it. And he that could take out a counter without any noise was allowed to be a public fosterer. And he that could take a piece of silver out of the purse without noise of any of the bells was adjudged a judicial nipper, according to their terms of art. A fosterer was a pickpocket; an nipper was a pickpurse or cutpurse."

The lightning did considerable damage to the electric light wires in this city during the electrical storm yesterday afternoon. Transformers were burned out on Park street, Eastern avenue and on Washington street near the residence of W. A. Whitcomb and at the corner of Washington and Main streets. During the shower about four o'clock, the lightning struck an elm tree in the rear of the Benjamin house at Benjamin falls and caused no little fright among the large crowd of people from this city and Montpelier, who were gathered about the grounds trying to keep cool. When the rain began to fall, the crowds ran into the barn and the sheds about the premises and when the bolt struck the tree with a heavy crash women screamed and children began to cry. It is also said that two other trees in the woods near the falls were struck. The woods about the falls and the grand stand were crowded with people all day. A concert was given at the Hippodrome by Riley's orchestra during the afternoon and many people were in attendance.
